Camaraderie on tap after Idle Hands gets the boot

Brew buddies. Idle Hands Craft Ales was in a sticky situation until Nightshift bailed them out.

Things looked pretty grim for Idle Hands Craft Ales after the Wynn Everett casino handed down a notice to vacate their facility on Charlton Street to make way for construction of the casino.

Idle Hands and about 20 other businesses in the industrial side of town were given the boot on June 30, and the brewery's death knell seemed imminent.

But there is plenty of brotherhood in the craft beer brewing community. Their old neighbors, Nightshift Brewery, were not going to let their kegs kick for the last time.

"We'd always been helping each other out, from running out of grain or [bottle] caps all the way up to when they were in a sticky situation," Nightshift owner Rob Burns said.

"At first, we thought the casino would be a good idea," Chris Tkach of Idle Hands said. "It would clean up the location, which wasn't going to happen any other way without someone with deep pockets. But as things progressed, we saw the writing on the wall and my opinions on the casino flopped."

Tkach said that once Wynn bought the land in February 2015, the conversation about leaving and preparing to change gears was not up for debate or discussion at all.

There was no answer at the Wynn office Sunday and the company did not immediately return an email requesting comment.

Nightshift stepped up to the

"They'd do the same for us, no doubt ... they shouldn't fail because they got unlucky."

Rob Burns, owner of Nightshift Brewery plate as soon as they got wind of the mass exodus planned for Charlton Street.

"We told them, 'We're here for you, and we're open to any ideas,'" Burns said.

Initially, it seemed like the Charlton Street area wouldn't be part of the direct route to the proposed casino site. But when Boston Mayor Marty Walsh and Everett Mayor Carlo DeMaria squared off over land usage for the development, the battlefield included all of Tkach's turf, both personally and professionally.

"I have a unique perspective, living in Charlestown and am sort of getting screwed two-fold," Tkach said. "Because of Boston trying to stop things, Wynn had to come up with new plans in order to access the site. So the roadway is key. Trucks rolling through Boston streets would get endless harassment from BPD. Those trucks would be weighed at every stop, every time."

The Belgian-style brewers brought their own equipment to the Nightshift facility located right across the street from the Teddy Peanut Butter factory.

"It's always interesting. This is why we collaborate. There's a million different ways to brew a beer, and it's been a great learning experience from small- to large-scale experiences. [It's a] cool opportunity for the customers too," Burns said.

Tkach said that Nightshift has been nothing short of a godsend to the momentarily debilitated Idle Hands.

"The previous owner sold the property and served everyone in the property notice to vacate," Tkach said. "Wynn, I think, was told that the land had already been vacated and were left holding the bag with tenants who were pretty much all in the dark."

Both Idle Hands and Nightshift saw this as an unfortunate, yet manageable set of circumstances.

"When you're in a position to help, it makes you feel like you're a part of something bigger," Burns said. "We have an opportunity to help because of our fans, and we have this humbling opportunity to help out our friends. They'd do the same for us, no doubt. Helping a small biz through a rough patch is what makes it all worth it. Celebrate camaraderie of starting together. They're all great and they shouldn't fail because they got unlucky."

Burns said that though he had mixed feelings about the casino, he saw opportunities in bringing new life into cities and towns that were otherwise in need of revitalizing TLC.

"When we first heard, we had mixed feelings. I grew up outside of Philly with Atlantic City as a quick drive," Burns said. "I saw the rise and fall of that, and don't want that here at all. It'll bring attention and improvements to roads and infrastructure and transportation. But we're hesitant because we know that only so much space is available. It's unfortunate, but it's also a positive that they have the chance to go somewhere better."

Idle Hands has a court date in early August to finalize its tentative situation in moving out of its facilities. In the meantime, the brewery is in search of a new home.

"In about two weeks time, we'll have a better sense of what's going to happen next," Tkach said. "But I think we're headed toward greener pastures."

Taxi drivers

Cambridge cabbies set to strike today

If you're looking to hail a cab in Cambridge on Monday you might be out of luck.

Fed up with the Uber-size issues that come with regulations for ridesharing services, taxi drivers in the city are planning to strike all day, beginning at 4 a.m., according to reports.

Cabbies around the world have long said services like Uber and Lyft, which let users order on-demand rides using smartphones, are putting them out of business.

The planned strike is meant to pressure lawmakers to force the services to play by the same rules as traditional cabs when it comes to insurance, background checks and training, The Boston Globe reported on Saturday.

Not a cab customer? You may still feel the impact of the action because taxi drivers could band together and block streets, the Globe reported.

Taxi drivers in Boston rallied on the same issue in December, calling on lawmakers to regulate ridesharing apps in front of City Hall.

Six things you need to know

Obama to unveil tougher climate change plan

President Barack Obama will unveil on Monday the final version of his plan to tackle greenhouse gases from coal-fired power plants, kicking off what is expected to be a tumultuous legal battle against federal environmental regulators by the coal industry and its political allies.

The revised Clean Power Plan will seek to slash carbon emissions from the power sector by 32 percent by 2030 from 2005 levels, a 9 percent increase over a previous proposal, a senior White House official said, speaking on the condition of anonymity ahead of Monday's official launch.

The regulation is aimed at ushering in a sweeping transformation of the U.S. electricity sector, encouraging an aggressive shift toward more renewable energy away from coal-fired electricity.

Industry groups and some lawmakers from states that have relied on coal-based energy have vowed to challenge it in the courts and through congressional maneuvers, accusing the administration of a regulatory assault that will drive up energy prices.

The White House took a defiant stance, saying the release of the plan was "the starting gun for an all-out climate push" by the president and his cabinet.

"My administration will release the final version of America's Clean Power Plan, the biggest, most important step we have ever taken to combat climate change," Obama said in a video. REUTERS

Italy coast guard rescues 1,800 sea migrants, five found dead

Italy's coast guard said about 1,800 migrants were rescued from seven overcrowded vessels on Saturday, while five corpses were found on a large rubber boat carrying 212 others.

The dead bodies were found on board at the time of the rescue, a coast guard spokeswoman said on Sunday. The cause of death was not yet known, she said.

The Mediterranean has become the world's most deadly barrier for migrants and refugees, with 3,500 thought to have died at sea last year and almost 2,000 so far this year. Many are fleeing poverty and violence in the Middle East and Africa.

Kerry says US, Egypt return to 'stronger base'

The United States and Egypt are returning to a "stronger base" in bilateral ties despite tensions and human rights concerns, Secretary of State John Kerry said on Sunday after talks with his Egyptian counterpart.

"Egypt remains vital ... to engagement and stability in the region as a whole," said Kerry, who held the first strategic dialogue between the two countries since 2009.

"There are obviously circumstances where we have found reason to have grave concern and we have expressed it very publicly," he said at a news conference with Foreign Minister Sameh Shukri. "But we have multiple issues that we need to work on simultaneously." REUTERS

Verizon's workers say no strike for now, union talks continue

Verizon Communications and the unions representing its wireline unit employees on the East Coast said work will go on and talks continue after their current contract expired.

Since June, the unions have been in talks with Verizon over the company's plans to cut costs by controlling health care and pension-related benefits over a three-year period.

Last week, the Communications Workers of America and International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers that represent over 37,000 wireline employees said they had voted to go on strike, if needed, after their contract expired on Aug. 1. REUTERS

Manhunt underway for killer of Memphis police officer

A manhunt was underway Sunday in Tennessee for the killer of a Memphis police officer who was fatally shot during a traffic stop on Saturday night, officials said.

Sean Bolton, 33, died from multiple gunshot wounds after being discovered critically wounded at about 9:15 p.m. local time Saturday, Memphis police said. A citizen used the officer's radio to report the shooting, police said.

The Memphis Commercial Appeal reported via Twitter that police surrounded an apartment building on Sunday morning looking for a suspect related to the shooting but left and apparently did not make an arrest. Police also recovered a handgun in a field near the shooting scene, the newspaper reported. Memphis police could not be reached for comment. REUTERS

Naomi Campbell, convicted paparazzo-basher

Supermodel Naomi Campbell is not one you should mess with, which comes as no surprise to anyone who remembers the whole "Blackberry to the housekeeper's head" incident back in 2006. And just three years later, in 2009, she reportedly hit an Italian photographer in the face with her designer purse, scratching his eye. And now she's been convicted of assault in that case, earning a six-month suspended prison sentence, according to the Telegraph. "We are appealing the ruling surrounding the 2009 incident," her attorney says in a statement. So how badass is Naomi Campbell? She has a subsection of her Wikipedia page titled "Assault cases." Plural. So there.

Foo Fighters can't say no to 1,000 Italians

It turns out that if you gather up 1,000 fellow rock musicians in a field to play the Foo Fighters' "Learn to Fly" all in an attempt to woo the band into coming to play your small Italian town, it will be worth the effort. Fabio Zaffagnini's Rockin' 1000 music video project went viral late last week as a bid to bring the band to Romagna, Italy — and it didn't take long for Dave Grohl to respond. "Forgive me that I don't speak Italian, only a little," Grohl says in an iPhone video posted to Facebook. "This video, how beautiful, so beautiful. Thank you so much. We are coming, I promise. We'll see you soon." But I mean, how could he really say no? I'm just worried this is setting a dangerous precedent.

Charlize Theron adopts again

Charlize Theron is a mom once more. The "Dark Places" star has adopted a second child, an African-American baby girl, according to E! News. Theron also has a son, Jackson, 3, whom she adopted in 2012. Theron's new daughter is named August and was born in the U.S. in, awkwardly, July. Still, I guess "July" would've been a pretty silly name.

Meanwhile, Theron has finally had to actually talk to ex-boyfriend Sean Penn after reportedly ghosting on their relationship. The pair were reunited in South Africa last week for reshoots on their upcoming movie "The Last Face." That must have not been awkward at all, right?

MOMMY DEAREST, AGAIN.

Channing Tatum signs his 'Gambit' deal

OF COURSE I'M DOING THE MOVIE!

So those rumors last week that Channing Tatum was pulling out of his "Gambit" superhero film? Yeah, not so much. The "Magic Mike" star has reportedly closed his deal for the "X-Men" spin-off film, in which he'll star as the card-slinging fan-favorite Cajun mutant in a trench coat. There's even talk now that his character is meant to be the new linchpin across the X-franchise, since Hugh Jackman and Jennifer Lawrence are putting their mutant days behind them. So what was the deal with last week's talk of Tatum bailing on the deal? Maybe a negotiating tactic by Fox or Tatum's team to move things along? Pretty sneaky.

Cult classic

How much have you paid attention to the film's die-hard fans and what they would want to see exploring more of these characters?

DW: To me, I don't think we're like, literally serving the fans per se, but I do think we are very caring of this group of characters and what it is and care about it as fans ourselves of it, in a way. And it's very important to us to make something that satisfies the fans' desire for more of this while, at the same time, not doing any sort of retread. That was what we were trying to do.

Happy campers

Comedy. David Wain and Michael Showalter bring cult classic "Wet Hot American Summer" back with a little help from Netflix.

One of the more intriguing entries in Netflix's ever-growing roster of original series is "Wet Hot American Summer," a prequel to the cult comedy from "The State" alums David Wain and Michael Showalter — and featuring a before-they-were-stars cast including Bradley Cooper, Paul Rudd and Amy Poehler, who all return for the series.

Were there any reservations about doing a prequel with the same actors?

MICHAEL SHOWALTER: No, that was an asset. In our mind, that was part of the fun of it — the joke being we were too old then, we're way too old now, and instead of making our characters older, we made them younger.

DAVID WAIN: It's surprising how much you stop paying attention to it.

MS: One of the big movies from our childhood was "Grease," with John Travolta and Olivia Newton-John, who are playing high school. ...

I don't even think they're seniors.

DW: They're seniors.

MS: They are? They're definitely seniors?

DW: They're seniors in high school.

MS: And I mean, they're fully adult in that movie. Like, Olivia Newton-John is like, in her late 30s. But I mean that was sort of our inspiration, casting-wise. Because you don't care.

What about the new additions to the cast?

DW: Jason Schwartzman plays one of the head counselors. Lake Bell plays [Showalter's character] Coop's girlfriend who just got back from a trip to Israel. We have Michael Cera and Jon Hamm and Chris Pine all playing roles that are too surprising to tell you more about. We have Michaela Watkins playing a choreographer for the big musical that happens later that day. John Slattery is playing the guest director of the musical. Kristen Wiig, Josh Charles [and even I] make an appearance as an Israeli counselor who poses a threat to Coop.

MS: Yeah, David's character and my character and Lake Bell's character are in sort of, like, a love triangle.

Without getting into actual figures, how did the budget for this compare to the original film?

DW: I think it was $75 million per episode.

MS: We had "Avengers"-type numbers. It was an embarrassment of budget. We were just giving people bags of money on the way out.

DW: Basically, when you had lunch on set, you could have brownies or Arnold Palmers or just a bag of money. Or all three if you want, if you were that hungry.

Sounds delicious.

DW: Basically, the process of doing it was very similar to the original movie. We're 15 years older, and a million things have happened in our careers, but the actual going back to it was like, a total mind trip.

MS: We didn't sleep in the bunks. When we made the original, we slept in the bunks.

DW: Yeah, we slept in the cabins and ate the camp food.

MS: Well, eventually we stopped eating camp food.

DW: On the original movie, the camp cooks made the food for the crew, but it was so bad that even our low-budget, young, hungry crew was like ...

MS: "I can't eat this."

Come for the acting, stay for the marching band. / LIZA VOLL

If you've never believed there might be homoerotic underpinnings to football, Company One's "Colossal" will certainly make a believer out of you.

This tale of a college football team features men in various states of undress, frolicking and butt-slapping like the alpha men they purport to be. Then their co-captains fall in love.

Suspending disbelief is one thing, but suggesting a team of college athletes wouldn't notice when their captains engage in a weightlifting session that includes squats with man-on-man grinding teeters is absurd.

The plot hinges on Mike (Alex Molina), a former ballet dancer who switched to football against his father's wishes then suffered an accident that left him a paraplegic.

The heart of the story begins when Mike (played post-accident by Marlon Shepard) does battle with his younger self (Molina), his physical therapist Jerry (Greg Maraio) and his father (Tommy Neblett). Toss a broken romance into the mix, and you get a story of heartache and frustration with a spotlight on the brutal reality of football.

But playwright Andrew Hinderaker puts the proverbial accent on the wrong syllable, and the result is a convoluted flurry of activity that forces the story to take a backseat to its telling. Director Summer Williams does a masterful job of executing the various activities (including goal posts, scoreboards, a halftime show and a ballet), but "Colossal" isn't greater than the sum of its parts. NICK DUSSAULT

'The Gift' (Aug. 7)

Joel Edgerton writes, directs and acts creepy as hell in this taut thriller about an unhappily married couple (Jason Bateman and Rebecca Hall) who let their social graces get the better of them with a pesky old pal (Edgerton). It's a genuinely disturbing and delightful surprise.

Cures for summer movie fatigue

It's been a summer that's seen such hits as "Mad Max: Fury Road," "Jurassic World" and "Mission: Impossible — Rogue Nation," but are you feeling a bit blockbusted out? Suffering from CGI fatigue? Who can blame you, when "summer" now starts in April at the multiplex. But don't worry, there are plenty of explosion-free alternatives out this summer. NED EHRBAR

Aries Present an upbeat attitude. If a change is required, do something about it. You have the ability to turn a negative situation into a positive.

Taurus You're not likely to make important connections by hiding your skills. You will gain crucial allies if you exhibit confidence and knowledge.

Gemini Gossiping will backfire on you. Instead of making someone else look bad, you will tarnish your reputation. Keep negative comments to yourself.

Cancer There are many ways to get ahead. The more people you involve in your quest, the better off you will be. Keep plugging away.

Leo When assisting an elderly relative, you should keep your opinions to yourself. Go over your personal papers to find a way to free up cash.

Virgo Love is in the air. Be free with your feelings and share your intentions. Make the first move when it comes to romance.

Libra It's up to you to make the most of a situation. Bring about the changes required to improve your life. Take a different approach.

Scorpio Be honest about what you want. Airing your thoughts and sharing plans will help you flush out any potential problems.

Sagittarius You will face resistance if you try to get your own way today. If you agree to meet family members halfway, everyone will be satisfied.

Capricorn If you find you are confused, ask questions. The people who always stick by you will make sure you are treated fairly.

Aquarius Have faith in your abilities. A new position is in the offing. Your ideas are sound, but someone will steal your thunder if you are too generous.

Pisces Don't impose your will on others. Direct your attention to a cause you believe in. You will feel fulfilled if you make a difference. EUGENIA LAST

This 19-year-old is changing the way kids engage with science

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Sara Sakowitz launched a subscription science-experiment service from her dorm room — and it's blowing up.

RAQUEL LANERI
@RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

Sara Sakowitz is a 19-year-old biochemistry major. She's also an award-winning cancer researcher, innovator and entrepreneur whose business could revolutionize education.

The Columbia University sophomore launched Blue Moon Box — a monthly subscription service that sends science-experiment kits right to kids' doorsteps — from her college dorm room with her friend Soham Daga in March. What started as a way to get Daga's sister interested in science soon snowballed into a full-blown Kickstarter-backed business (it raised $16,000) featured on "Good Morning America."

"I never expected it to be more than just a project that I had the opportunity to work on before winter break," says Sakowitz, who soon was getting requests for more boxes for playdates, classrooms and more. "By the time I got back, we were trying to keep up with the pace of the demand, and it was clear to me that this was something much larger."

Now, Blue Moon Box has more than 400 subscribers in 42 states throughout the country, including Hawaii, and Sakowitz has just won a 10 Under 20: Young Innovators to Watch award for her work. We asked the New Yorker — who is spending the summer doing medical research at Stanford University — about why Blue Moon Box has gotten so popular.

It encourages kids to get their hands dirty

"I first fell in love with science just from finding it around my house," says Sakowitz, who remembers mixing baking soda and vinegar to create an erupting volcano at a young age and being entranced. "Those little kitchen-table experiments gave me the tools to explore my world and the science behind it from a really early age."

And she's not alone. "In my experiences competing in science fairs and working in cancer research labs — which I've been doing since I was 16 — I've met a lot of people who share my passion," she says. "And the common thread between us is that we were given these literally hands-on opportunities to figure out how the world worked. I wanted to give kids that same experience."

Kids aren't getting the science education they need in the classroom

Studies have shown that "learning by doing" — as opposed to just reading — helps students perform better in science. Yet, as schools face shrinking budgets, teachers don't have the resources to incorporate hands-on learning into their classes. "So kids are learning scientific concepts from worksheets or PowerPoint presentations, and they're not experiencing that magic you get when you do it yourself," says Sakowitz.

That leads to more and more kids thinking science is hard. Indeed, almost 60 percent of students who begin high school interested in science and math change their minds by graduation. "I wanted to show kids that science is approachable and fun and not something intimidating."

Science is the future

More than just fun — and

From scientist to business owner

Sara Sakowitz

"I started this process without any experience or training or knowledge about running a business," says Sakowitz. "I encounter new challenges every single day — from figuring out where I was going to buy all these materials wholesale to finding fulfillment centers for distribution. But I'm very willing to learn — whether that's going to Barnes and Noble and reading for hours, finding books about marketing at the library or even just Googling and Googling more. ... I really want to learn everything."

lucrative — science is vital. "I think science is one of the most important fields that society needs to move forward," says Sakowitz. "Think about all the problems in the world, from climate change to all of these diseases coming back because they're resistant to the medicines we have. We need future generations to face those challenges head-on, and they're going to need science to do that."

Which Patriots wideouts will make team, impact?

NFL. Who will Tom Brady (or Jimmy Garoppolo) be throwing to this season?

Well, somebody is going to be throwing the football for the New England Patriots on Week 1.

Whether it's Tom Brady or Jimmy Garoppolo, we'll find out in court.

But regardless of who is throwing it, it's on Patriots wide receivers to make the best of the situation and continue to do what the Patriots have been doing better than most teams over the last decade: score points.

Patriots wide receivers accounted for just 13 of the team's 34 receiving touchdowns last regular season, as Rob Gronkowski almost matched that number himself (12).

Those 13 touchdowns include just one from Danny Amendola, a player who appeared to be somewhat of an afterthought through most of the regular season, but really came up huge in the postseason.

Amendola and Edelman are sure to be favorite targets again in 2015. / GETTY IMAGES

Amendola restructured his contract over the offseason to stay with the team, something that appeared to be an unlikely scenario months prior.

With an assumed increased role in the offense for Amendola, the Patriots should improve upon their totals at the wide receiver spot.

Let's take a look at Amendola and the rest of the wide receiver corps in camp.

The automatics: Julian Edelman, Brandon LaFell, Danny Amendola, Matthew Slater

With the changeover that's gone on at the cornerback position, drills such as 7-on-7 and 11-on-11 are going to feel like a breeze for these wide receivers compared with last year. All of New England's top guys are back.

Julian Edelman returns as Brady's (Garoppolo's?) favorite target after a season in which he grabbed a team-high 92 balls for 972 yards and four touchdowns. Also returning is Brandon LaFell, who is fresh off his first season as a Patriot in which he caught 74 passes for 953 yards and seven touchdowns, seeing his role in the offense increase as the season went along.

Slater gets grouped in with the wide receivers, but he makes the team due to his being one of the best special teamers in the NFL.

On the bubble: Aaron Dobson, Brian Tyms, Brandon Gibson, Josh Boyce

There are a couple spots open for these players. Is this finally the year Aaron Dobson does something ... anything? Dobson stands 6-for-3, 205 pounds and is considered an outside threat. But that's only the case if he's on the field. He's been ineffective or hurt the first two years of his career, so this could be a make-or-break camp for the third-year receiver.

Brian Tyms had a very limited role in the offense last season, but went ahead of Dobson and has a similar build. It could be either him or Dobson for one spot.

Brandon Gibson was signed to a one-year deal by the Pats in the offseason. The six-year veteran could be a nice addition at a very low cost, and also keep Josh Boyce off the 53-man roster. Practice Squad potential: Zach D'Orazio, Chris Harper, Jonathan Krause

Sox can't complete sweep

The Red Sox were two innings away from a three-game sweep of Tampa on Sunday afternoon, but a blown save in the eighth by Junichi Tazawa wasted a solid start by Wade Miley. After building a 3-1 lead early, thanks to RBIs from Hanley Ramirez, David Ortiz and Mike Napoli, Boston turned things over to the bullpen. James Loney knocked in Asdrubal Cabrera to score the game-winning run to help the Rays salvage a win. After an off day Monday, the Sox head to the Bronx to face the Yankees on Tuesday.

MLB. Larry Lucchino steps down as Red Sox president and CEO

The biggest news of the 2015 season came out Saturday night and was confirmed Sunday — Larry Lucchino is stepping down as president and CEO of the Red Sox.

"I believe the end of this year is a good time for this change," Lucchino wrote in a statement. "We would have preferred to announce all of our transition plans at once, including my new role, but I can tell you we all feel strongly that Sam Kennedy, who has been with me for 20 years, should be the next president of the Boston Red Sox. Sam will do a terrific job. He is able, well-prepared, and fiercely dedicated to the Red Sox and to Boston."

Lucchino spent 14 seasons with the Red Sox and has won three World Series titles during that time. The near-70-year-old won't just be remembered for those titles, but also the improvements he made in and around Fenway Park.

"He's clearly been a main player in an unprecedented run of success here in Boston," manager John Farrell said. RYAN HANNABLE
